

Lead Meetings that Build Community by Design

Most of us attend meetings because we are interested in the work at hand and the people doing it, yet too often we leave meetings feeling frustrated, overwhelmed and disconnected. With some basic tools and intention it is possible to lead meetings that grow relationships and leave participants feeling valued, connected, and invested in the group and the work.

In this workshop you will practice tools for building relationships during meetings, learn the theory behind the practice, and take home strategies for making every meeting effective, efficient and enriching.

Who is this workshop for?

Anyone who leads meetings or might lead meetings, especially meetings intended to foster teamwork, creativity, community building and motivation.
